

A black and white line drawing of a forest scene. In the foreground, a stream flows from the left towards the right, with several large, smooth rocks scattered along its banks and in the water. The water is depicted with simple horizontal lines. The background is filled with a dense forest of tall, slender trees with pointed, evergreen-like foliage. The sky is visible through the canopy of trees, showing some light clouds. The overall style is that of a simple line drawing, suitable for coloring or as a background for text.

They cried unto thee, and were delivered: They trusted in thee,
and were not put to shame.